

If It's Not Scottish, It's Crap!!!

If you like golf, you must visit Scotland. Playing the Old Course at St. Andrews is a gift few receive, but none will forget. Incredible revetted bunkers, gigantic double greens, endless undulations on a site that basically has no elevation change, and a bottomless pit of history place it at the top of the golf bucket list. But there are many more incredible destinations in Scotland, including the site of Jean van de Velde's meltdown at Carnoustie, other British Open rotation courses like Turnberry and Troon, and Pete Dye's inspiration for many of his most diabolical hazards at Cruden Bay.
